macroeconomic risks that can be realised. The operator explicitly points out that the value of financial products as well as the revenues generated from them can fall as well as rise. A certain development, the increase or preservation of the invested capital can therefore never be guaranteed. Past performance cannot be used as an indicator of future performance and can therefore in no way be regarded as a guarantee or indication of future profit performance. It is therefore possible with every capital investment that part of the invested capital, or in extreme cases the entire capital, may be lost.
